PRINCETON — Students at organization is jeopardized at this point," he continued. "I think that the NSA should stress its educational aspects further, and slack off on the political elements of a separation."

Larry Lucchino, a senior who also attended the conference in Illinois last August, said, "We heard a budget report out there, but it did not make any mention of CIA funds, and it balanced all right."

Situation Embarrassing
The former NSA coordinator at Princeton, junior Robert T. Burdsall, commented, "It is an embarrassing situation, although there could be either a positive or a negative side to the deal."

Spying Unlikely
I have no idea if NSA agents were involved in page activities, but I doubt I do think that Princeton would do nothing at the moment. Any action taken now would be premature," Strasburger said. "After all, the NSA is no longer involved with the page anything we do now would only hurt the reputation of the page more than it perhaps would help."

Obviously the whole
